2011 National Sports Law Negotiation Competition

A message from NSLNC Director, Jeremy M. Evans '11

This project has been in the making since February of 2009, when TJSL sent two teams (six students) and faculty advisor Randy Grossman to the National Baseball Salary Arbitration Competition hosted by Tulane University Law School in New Orleans, LA. Following that competition, competitors Jeremy Evans (2010-2011 President of the Student Bar Association at TJSL) and Brandon Leopoldus (2009-2010 President of the TJSL Sports Law Society) approached Professor Paul Spiegelman (Faculty Advisor of the ADR Competition Team) about this idea. Professor Spiegelman was extremely supportive when offering his ideas and advice in setting up a competition of this nature.

The new TJSL Campus provided us with the opportunity to host such an event, with the additional space, we are now able to accommodate a large national competition while showcasing this start-of-the-art facility we now call home.

In addition, we have chosen to focus this competition on an area of law not yet being utilized in the arena of law school competition. As a result, while Tulane hosts a Baseball Salary Arbitration, this is a niche area of one particular sport. The Competition will adjust to the current issues facing sports entities each year and will allow students, coaches and judges to work on real issues in a controlled setting. In addition, the fact patterns will allow students to focus on more than just one area of sport law including: contract negotiation, trading of players, salary demands and details, intellectual property and so on.

This year, we are excited to partner up with the Student Bar Association and The Alternative Dispute Resolution Society to make this weekend all about sports.

We are honored to welcome ADR teams from law schools all over the country to hear our panelists speak on some of the most relevant issues in Sports Law today.

Our first panel is designed to flow naturally from the final found of competition held on Sunday morning at 9:30 a.m. with the topic of that panel touching upon some of the issues that may be raised in that round. We invite you to attend that round before lunch and to truly make this a day about Sports!
