Thomas Jefferson School of Law Named Among Top 25 Most Connected in Country

GraduatePrograms.com polled more than 10,000 current, former law students to rank schools with best networking opportunities

San Diego, CA – June 10, 2015 – Thomas Jefferson School of Law, one of the most diverse law schools in the country, was named among the nation’s top 25 most connected institutions, according to GraduatePrograms.com.

The renowned site polled more than 10,000 current and former law students to determine what schools provided the best networking opportunities.

“We’re honored by this recognition and proud to be in the company of other well-respected institutions, including Yale, Stanford, North Carolina, Duke and Notre Dame,” said Thomas Guernsey, President and Dean of Thomas Jefferson School of Law. “While we have numerous students forging a successful path to becoming lawyers, many in our program are looking to leverage their law degree in other professions. We, therefore, have the privilege and responsibility to not only teach the comprehensive elements of law, but also help our students and alumni build strong relationships with business, civic and community leaders that can help them achieve their professional aspirations.”

Participants rated programs on a 10-point scale, with 10 being the strongest, in areas that include faculty, peer and alumni networks available to them while in school as well as after graduation. The scores were then averaged to determine the programs with the best networking opportunities.

About Thomas Jefferson School of Law

Thomas Jefferson would be proud of the law school that bears his name. The ideals of this towering figure in American history help to inspire our mission and purpose.

Thomas Jefferson School of Law was founded in 1969 as the San Diego campus of the Western State University College of Law, a privately owned institution in Orange County, California. Located in Downtown San Diego, our law school began as a part-time program designed for working professionals who could attend only evening classes and soon began attracting local students who wanted to attend law school full-time.

Thomas Jefferson School of Law has evolved into an innovative, cutting-edge law school, devoted to the individual needs and success of the student. We are now a nationally-known law school with students from across the United States and around the world. We still serve the needs of working professionals with a part-time program of evening classes, in addition to our full-time program. More information is available at www.tjisl.edu.
